TEQUILA

Tequila is produced in the states of Jalisco, Guanajuato, Michoacán, Nayarit, and Tamaulipas. It is made from the BLUE WEBER agave plant, native to these regions. The production process starts by harvesting the mature agave plants and removing their spiky leaves. The core (known as the piña) is then roasted, crushed, fermented, and distilled. The final product is a flavorful spirit which showcases the distinctive characteristics of the region in which it was crafted. It may or may not be aged in oak barrels. Aging time in the barrel is denoted by:

MEZCAL

SOME BACANORA, RAICILLA & SOTOL, TOO

Historically, all agave spirits were known as mezcal (including Tequila). That changed in 1994 when Mezcal formally became its own Denomination of Origin. Mezcal can be made from almost 40 different species of agave and is certified in 10 states: Oaxaca, Guerrero, Michoacán, Puebla, Zacatecas, Guanajuato, San Luis Potosí, Tamaulipas, Durango and most recently Sinaloa! Most Mezcals are made by cooking the agave with wood and while some Mezcals are smokey, many others are not. Almost all mezcal is traditionally unaged, or "joven." The following spirits (Mezcal, Bacanora, Raicilla, and Sotol) are organized by the different plants from which they are made.
